Human Trafficking and Child Sexual Exploitation in Indian Country

AATTAP has delivered training to more than 4,000 law enforcement, social services personnel, prosecutors and government leaders through onsite and online Child Sex Trafficking (CST) courses. Of those, more than 700 participants represented tribal law enforcement and child protection roles. In addition to delivery of CST courses in both tribal and non-tribal communities, AATTAP has conducted training, technical assistance and analyses specific to the dynamics of child sex trafficking, exploitation and other problems affecting high-risk youth in Indian Country.

Goals for Training and Technical Assistance in Combatting Child Sex Trafficking in Indian Country

Create and expand awareness in tribal communities on the scope and understanding of the problem (challenges, issues to special populations, etc.) of human trafficking and child exploitation.

Increase willingness and capacity of tribal officials, thought leaders and other policy influencing community members to develop understanding around the impact of human trafficking.

Increase capability and skill of these same stakeholders in how to recognize trafficking, luring and exploitation activities on the internet and social media, along with other behaviors and indicators of trafficking victims and offenders.

Support Tribal communities in the creation and implementation of a comprehensive community approach to include community engagement, interdiction, arrest, recovery and support services for survivors.

History of Past Child Protection in Indian Country Initiatives:

High Risk Juveniles in Indian Country Project | Twenty-two organizations including nine tribes collaborated on identification, intervention and prosecution of crimes against Native American Youth who are exploited, trafficked or abducted in the communities outside their tribal lands.

Attitudes and Experiences of Native American Youth | Interviews and meetings were conducted with Native American Youth to determine the causative factors, behaviors and experiences that place these youth at risk of victimization. This included runaways, thrown away, youth in placement, technology facilitated crimes and other threats to children in tribal communities.

New Mexico High Risk Youth Project | Patterns of victimization were identified with youth from tribal and rural communities in New Mexico, from which training and technical assistance was developed to address these issues. Over 100 law enforcement, social services and government leaders have received training with the information developed from this project. The concept is now being used in the Pacific Northwest to address similar issues in that region.

Internet Crimes Against Children (ICAC) in Indian Country | The growing issue of the use of technology to facilitate crimes against children in Indian Country was addressed, with access provided to tribal communities in the areas of technology, resources for investigative activities, prevention materials and access to their area ICAC Task Force. Regional training programs were conducted by ICAC and tribal instructors.

Urban Indian Youth Project | Issues related to the exploitation and victimization of Native American youth in urban communities were addressed with focus on factors which place children in Tribal communities at increased risk due to a lack of resources and community.

The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) and AMBER Alert Tribal Leaders Project | Dynamics and factors driving child exploitation and technology-facilitated crimes in tribal communities were addressed through this project, allowing AATTAP and NCMEC to partner on directed training, technical assistance and resources for tribes. The project provided AATTAP tribal subject matter experts to NCMEC for cultural awareness and topical issues facing native communities.

Ongoing Child Protection in Indian Country Initiatives:

Community Engagement Workshops | Facilitated workshops with tribal public safety and community members to educate and engage the entire community in long-term child protection solutions.

Virtual Meeting Events (Online Town Hall Meetings) on Child Protection | These events engage those tribal organizations and agencies which have the capacity to participate in this online meeting format. The goal is to send a tribal consultant to an onsite location to assist the tribal event host in facilitating discussions with participating tribal partners via a web platform. Other tribal organizations can then connect to the event for discussion and collaborative planning regarding prevention, identification, interdiction and response to human trafficking issues.

Regional AMBER Alert and Child Protection Partner Meetings | Tribal leaders and child protection partners are encouraged to participate in regional AMBER Alert meetings to collaborate with state and local law enforcement agencies in their area to ensure a collaborative response to human trafficking.

HT-CST Survivor Roundtables | These events, held annually, bring together survivors of human trafficking and child sexual exploitation, including those from Tribal communities, to obtain direct feedback on the responses of law enforcement, child protection officials, prosecutors, the media, and others to their experiences.
